The men were not there and the officers went on to East Montpelier village. There they found that Charles Dudley had given a ride to two men whose description tallied with that of the men wanted. That was a little after noon, When Mr. Dudley dropped the men they started on foot toward Plainfield. Thinking that it was the intention of the fugitives to take the train at that place the officers whipped up their horses and got to the station just as the train did. A search of the train, however, brought no trace of them.

But Charles Comstock volunteered the information that he had seen two men near the farm of Howard Martin on the road toward Marshfield, and that he thought they were the ones the officers were after. So the latter whipped up again and went to Marshfield. Stronger clues were found there. The two men heads of the started off with two

They reached West Danville at half past ten o'clock, and Sheriff Tracy went on to Danville Green. The train which they thought the men might have taken had not arrived.

While they were waiting there, Sher-iff Silloway telephoned that two men, without doubt those wanted, were in a barn on the farm of a man named Clark. Henry G. Badger, with two men, went, at the request of the sheriffs and captured the men, and was taking them to his home when the pursuing party caught up with them. # WATER SCARCITY

the Schedule for Several Days.

The mail service is again crippled. It's not snow this time; it's water, or rather the scarcity of water. The Central Vermont R. R. is feeling keenly the drouth which is being experienced all over Vermont. On account of the lack of water the trains for two days have been from one to two hours late, not enough being secured for the locomotives to run under the usual pressure of steam. The forenoon mail, due here at 9:40 o'clock, reached here a few minutes before noon today.

Unless there is a relief to the drouth soon it may be necessary to take some trains off the road until more water can be obtained. During a drouth two years ago, it was necessary to run water trains to Swanton to get a sup-ply for the engines, and this expedient may become necessary in this crisis.
